

How would you react amid total war? Base your response on your readings so far this term. Explain your perspective by writing in the first person and by referring to specific, concrete examples from the assigned course materials. Be sure to cite your sources!

In terms of grading, the best reflection papers (due Feb. 18) will:

- Make a clear main point and relevant sub-points that respond directly to the prompt;
- Draw thoughtfully and persuasively on concrete evidence from the course materials;
- Cite these source materials consistently and accurately; Implement a clear structure that connects the main point to relevant subsidiary points and supporting evidence;
- Organize the text in complete sentences and coherent paragraphs, including effective transitions between different ideas;
- Demonstrate original, creative thinking about the course themes and their relevance to our own lives and lived experiences;
- Utilize standard, consistent spelling and grammar.

How would you react to total war?

1) paranoia [being drafted]

2) Conflicted - if people around me volunteer to enlist (ref), why shouldn't

I? What makes me better than them?

3) guilty: if I go to war, I'll feel bad for leaving my family behind (only child). If I don't, I'll feel bad for other kids my age who did, what makes me better than them?

4) hopeless: sense of frustration with global leaders for still not being able to prevent something as awful as total war.

after the first
two times leading to a sense of hopelessness for my future. If we still can't prevent total wars, what does this
